~ THE POWER OF POSITION ~

God has the power and ability to get the best out of your life and before your days are over, before your time is up, God can do His best work ever. You may need to be reprogrammed. The way you think, your attitudes may need to be realigned and your tongue adjusted.

You must make a much greater effort to increase your faith. Focus your eyes more on what God wants you to be seeing. God is the potter of your life. You are the clay in His hands and only God has the true power to reshape (restructure) any life.

It is up to you if you will allow God to have His way and do His will as a useful tool for the goals of His kingdom. If you will let God reset your outlook then you can more clearly understand how to live a more beneficial and purposeful life.

Fear and the cares of this world are some of the greatest tools that God's enemies use to get us to compromise and surrender good principles and to cause so many to allow what is right to fall to what is wrong. Truth will not hold its power of position in anyone's life as long as it is negotiable in any form.

The person who will reign with Christ in heaven's eternity is the person who obeys and serves Christ while here on earth.

ASK THE MOTOR MEDICS®

Automotive Advice from the Under The Hood® Show

Dear Motor Medics,

My check engine light has been illuminated on my car for almost a year. When it first came on, I was alarmed so I had my mechanic check it out, they said it was due to a failed catalytic convertor and that it would be expensive to fix but since it would not harm the engine I could keep driving it that way and ignore the light. After about six months the engine started to run rough so I went back, and they told me I now had several other codes that needed immediate repair otherwise severe engine damage could occur. I don't want to spend the money on a convertor but how can I tell if something is failing if the light is already on for something else? My car is a 2008 Pontiac Grand Prix with 75k miles.

Thank you,
Ellen in Madison Wisconsin

Dear Ellen,

You can't tell if the light is already on. You need to repair the issue with the convertor in addition to the other system as well. I know many shops tell their customers a failed convertor won't hurt the engine so you can drive it but there are always side effects. In this case you can't tell what other problems may be in the system. This car may still be covered by an eight-year 80k mile federal emissions warranty that may cover the convertor. Check with a GM dealership to see if this is so.

Take care,
the Motor Medics

Dear Motor Medics,

I have a 2008 Chevy Silverado with an in-dash cd player and for about a year the cds have not been ejecting well. Now I have three stuck in the unit and one belongs to the library. The others I basically store in the unit to save space in the console. Is there any way I can remove them myself? I have tried to use a screwdriver to open the door but can't see much inside the unit.

Thank you,
Tom in Martinsville

Dear Tom,

Stop! Don't ever try to use anything to pull a cd from an in-dash unit. These units are extremely delicate and doing so can damage the unit. Even the act of pushing a cd into the unit instead of letting the unit pull it in slowly by itself can damage the delicate mechanism. The unit may have failed just because it is aging but it may also be due to the cds used in the unit. An in-dash changer like yours is even more sensitive to cd quality than single disc players and it is extremely important to only use cds that are perfectly flat without any kind of stick-on labels; anything else is prone to getting stuck. A radio repair shop may be able to remove the disc then fix the unit, but the cost often exceeds the price of a similar replacement. You may want to check with the library for the cost of a replacement CD.

Take care,
the Motor Medics

Dear Motor Medics,

I heard you talking about electric cars on your radio show and how they are going to be here right away and how we will all be forced to buy them. I have some questions. How are they supposed to work in the north where its zero? Everyone knows that batteries lose more than half their charge in the cold. And what about all that weight of the batteries and all the junk batteries that will be lying around. And one more thing. What about charging and where do they expect all that electricity to come from?

Thank you,
Cory in Bottineau ND.

Dear Cory,

Pull back the reigns a bit. These cars are not all going to appear overnight, and no one is forcing you to own one. The same was said about the millions of hybrid cars and trucks here now when they first appeared. At some point yes, there will be no more gas cars and you would have to buy electric but that could be many, many years. The cold does not affect modern batteries like it used to. Just look at the hybrids out there working in the cold. Weight is about the same once you remove the gas engine components and batteries get recycled every day. Do you fill your car every day? Not usually and that goes for charging as well. Most cars will be plugged in for a short charge nightly greatly reducing the grid use. Take care, the Motor Medics.

Take care,
the Motor Medics

Dear Motor Medics,

I have a flex fuel vehicle but have never used anything in the fuel tank other than e10 or e15. This car is five years old and I have though about using the less expensive e85, but a lot of friends tell me that that is a dumb idea because it will only get half as many miles per gallon and that it will ruin the engine if I use it too much. Is there any truth to that and can I start now after not using it for so many years?

Thank you,
Kelly in Saint Jo Missouri

Dear Kelly,

It's funny how we get advice from others and it sticks with us forever. When the three of us here on our radio show were kids our dads taught us which motor oil was best and each one of us has a different favorite. They also taught us that starting your car with the ac turned on would kill it. These are both things that are just not true. Ethanol will not kill your car, and either will one brand of oil Vs. another. If you have a newer flex fuel vehicle the name says it all. It was designed to run on fuel up to e85 and should be fine if it is in a good state of tune. Sticking with blends of around 30% or less will net the best mileage though. The time length should not be and issue either.

Take care,
the Motor Medics
