ASK THE MOTOR MEDICS[®]

Automotive Advice from the Under The Hood[®] Show

Dear Motor Medics,

I heard you talking about electric cars on your radio show and how they are going to be here right away and how we will all be forced to buy them. I have some questions. How are they supposed to work in the north where its zero? Everyone knows that batteries lose more than half their charge in the cold. And what about all that weight of the batteries and all the junk batteries that will be lying around. And one more thing. What about charging and where do they expect all that electricity to come from?

Thank you,
Steve and Jennifer, listening this week to KMAS from the KOA outside Seattle Washington

Dear Steve and Jennifer,

Thank you for being such die-hard Hoodies. There are aftermarket kits out there to do just what you want. These kits have many features like individual tire pressure, low or high-pressure alerts and more. The features depend on the price you pay for the unit. Many people monitor every wheel on the vehicle and trailer. The units can be very easy to install yourself and can be found at many truck stops, camping centers, and parts stores. Knowing your pressures is a great way to increase your safety.

Take care,
the Motor Medics

Dear Motor Medics,

I have heard you talk about cabin air filters many times over the years so you would think that I would take the time to see if my car was equipped with one. My vents started to blow much weaker over the past few months and I just kept turning up the dial until I could not get the car to cool off. I was not able to get in right away to have it checked and I started hearing a rattle noise under my hood when I had the defroster or air conditioning on. Once I had time to get it to the shop, they told me my air conditioning compressor had failed and it would cost $1400.00 to repair it in addition to the $15.00 cabin air filter which they will install for free with the repair. Why would a dirty air filter cause a bad compressor? Some cars don't even have a filter.

Thank you,
Myron in Valentine Nebraska

Dear Myron,

Filters need to be changed regularly or they will restrict airflow. When it gets severely restricted the evaporator core for the air conditioning may get so cold that oil in the system will not flow well and it is possible that in some cases it could damage the system. Usually, the pressure switch in the system would shut it down but we don't know all your details. If you have a cabin air filter, check its condition regularly and replace if needed.

Take care,
the Motor Medics

Dear Motor Medics,

How are they supposed to work in the north where its zero? Everyone knows that batteries lose more than half their charge in the cold. And what about all that weight of the batteries and all the junk batteries that will be lying around. And one more thing. What about charging and where do they expect all that electricity to come from?

Thank you,
Cory in Bottineau ND.

Dear Cory,

Pull back the reigns a bit. These cars are not all going to appear overnight, and no one is forcing you to own one. The same was said about the millions of hybrid cars and trucks here now when they first appeared. At some point yes, there will be no more gas cars and you would have to buy electric but that could be many, many years. The cold does not affect modern batteries like it used to. Just look at the hybrids out there working in the cold. Weight is about the same once you remove the gas engine components and batteries get recycled every day. Do you fill your car every day? Not usually and that goes for charging as well. Most cars will be plugged in for a short charge nightly greatly reducing the grid use. Take care, the Motor Medics.

Take care,
the Motor Medics

Dear Motor Medics,

I have a flex fuel vehicle but have never used anything in the fuel tank other than e10 or e15. This car is five years old and I have though about using the less expensive e85, but a lot of friends tell me that that is a dumb idea because it will only get half as many miles per gallon and that it will ruin the engine if I use it too much. Is there any truth to that and can I start now after not using it for so many years?

Thank you,
Kelly in Saint Jo Missouri

Dear Kelly,

It's funny how we get advice from others and it sticks with us forever. When the three of us here on our radio show were kids our dads taught us which motor oil was best and each one of us has a different favorite. They also taught us that starting your car with the ac turned on would kill it. These are both things that are just not true. Ethanol will not kill your car, and either will one brand of oil Vs. another. If you have a newer flex fuel vehicle the name says it all. It was designed to run on fuel up to e85 and should be fine if it is in a good state of tune. Sticking with blends of around 30% or less will net the best mileage though. The time length should not be and issue either.

Take care,
the Motor Medics
