~ Temporary Residence ~

This world belongs to God, every inch of it. No one has the true rights to God's earth but only on loan. This world is only a temporary residence. No one really belongs here. For now, they're just given a temporary place to let them prepare for their true destination.

Oh, but we fight so much to have and acquire things to try and extend our lives, to buy us more time. But it won't work. The Bible says there is appointed a time to die, and that means all of us. You don't belong here. God allowed it, but it is not permanent. You are going to leave. Nobody gets to stay.

This world will be totally destroyed before long. The Bible says by fire. Then and only then can those followers of Christ return to a new world that they can live in forever. But make no mistake about it, no one, absolutely no one, can ever have eternity with God without accepting, repenting, and seeking to make wrongs right by asking God's forgiveness. Without first turning their lives over to Jesus Christ, the Son of God, there is no other way.

ASK THE MOTOR MEDICS®

Automotive Advice from the Under The Hood® Show

Dear Motor Medics,

I have a 2018 Chevy Malibu and every morning when I start it or if it sits for more than six hours it rattles so loudly that I am scared that something may come apart. I took it to a shop who said that I need new timing chains. The cost of the chains is around $2000. I asked why they failed, and they told me that it was likely due to lack of regular oil changes. I have always changed the engine oil very soon after the dash light comes on telling me to change it. What else could it be and will it happen again?

Thank you,
Bob in Cloquet Minnesota

Dear Bob,

Timing chain failure is very common in some cars and trucks. The chains wear and stretch and then they get very noisy. If they get too loose, they will jump teeth on the gears and cause the engine to be heavily damaged. The shop is also correct in their assessment that it could be from lack of regular oil changes. That dash light is far from perfect. As you have probably noticed, it can range greatly from a few thousand miles to five or six thousand, which is way too much. We have found that most vehicles that have common timing chain failures have a much lower failure rate when the oil is changed at three months or three thousand miles whichever occurs first. Once the chains are replaced try changing your lube routine and see.

Take care,
the Motor Medics

Dear Motor Medics,

We have two seasons in our area of the world, pothole season and pothole season. It seems like every time I drive, I hit at least one and I have had to make repairs to my car twice in the past two years due to damage caused by them. The last hit bent a front lower control arm and the one before that bent a wheel in the back. My son has now hit one with his car and the shop tells him it will cost over $4000 to repair it. It needs a front and rear strut on the passenger side and lower control arms and a rack and pinion. Once they fix it they will also need to align it. Is there any way to save some money on this?

Thank you,
David in Ogden Utah

Dear David,

There are things you can do to get this car back on the road. We would suggest checking into certified used parts. There are hundreds of self-service and full-service auto recycling yards across the country that supply parts. Using recycled parts can save you hundreds or thousands of dollars. Some people have a phobia about used parts but every car on the road is driving around with all its parts used as soon as it drives off the lot. Many have at least a one-year warranty too. Ask your shop about them.

Take care,
the Motor Medics

Dear Motor Medics,

I have a 1988 Chevy truck with a 350 and Manual transmission. I have 90k original owner miles on the truck and last year I rebuilt the engine from the ground up. I was a machinist in my pre-retirement career performing race car engine builds. I worked with a younger local mechanic who has a shop and together we built it up some and added custom exhaust, a bigger cam, cold air intake, etc. After all this the truck went through three fuel pumps in the tank. The original and two more. I am not a diagnostic guy so I had a local mechanic take a look and he says that the failure is due to me using 10 percent ethanol blends in my truck and that I should never use it. Is this a real thing? I have four other cars and two of them are even older with in-tank pumps and I have never had an issue with them, and they have many more miles on them.

Thank you,
Jerry in Branson, Missouri

Dear Jerry,

The information that the mechanic has given you is not correct. Using 10 percent ethanol is the standard these days and has been for many years. IN our area it has been that way for over 30 years so if it was the issue, we would have seen many fuel pump failures. Knowing what we do about these trucks from our shop we would lean towards wiring or relay issues.

Take care,
the Motor Medics

Dear Motor Medics,

My question is about tires. I recently went to a tire store with my 1998 Ford F150 to have 4 used tires mounted on it. The tires I brought in were never used spare tires that had been removed from vehicles at a dealership about twenty years ago. The tires were for sale at an auction, and they sold over fifty of them. When I went in, they said that the tires were over twenty years old, and it was against the law to use them due to the age. They told me it was because age degrades the tires, and they could blow out causing a crash. They look new and I think they just want to sell me new tires, but they did not offer that. They just said no and sent me on my way

Thank you,
Kevin in Ogden Utah

Dear Kevin,

Well, they are right. We don't know what your specific laws are but DOT frowns upon tires that old being on the road and in some states, yes, it is not legal to use them on the road. They will break down with time even when stored indoors so for your safety and the safety of others we do not recommend using them or selling them to someone who may use them for any purpose even for trailer tires. If they are on the road, they can be a hazard. Take care and stay safe.

Take care,
the Motor Medics
