Medication sharing is defined as the lending or borrowing of prescription medications where the recipient of those medicines is someone other than the person for whom the prescription is intended

- Dangers of medication sharing:
- Medications affect people differently
 - Doses are different for children
 - Expired medications are dangerous
 - Misuse of antibiotics is bad for everyone
 - Contradictions with certain health conditions

Sharing medication goes beyond opioids - many teens share ADHD medication. Use only your prescription medications that have your name on the label.

Approximately 70% of those who abuse prescription medications get them from family or friends. Keep your family safe by disposing of unused medications properly.
