

A photograph of Santa Claus sitting in a large, dark wooden chair. He has a long white beard and is wearing glasses. He is dressed in his traditional red and white suit. He is holding a large, open book of letters and is looking down at it. The background is dark with a warm, glowing light source, possibly a fireplace, creating a cozy atmosphere. The text "Letters To Santa" is overlaid in the top right corner in a large, white, sans-serif font.

Medication sharing is defined as the lending or borrowing of prescription medications where the recipient of those medicines is someone other than the person for whom the prescription is intended

Dangers of medication sharing:

- Medications affect people differently
- Doses are different for children
- Expired medications are dangerous
- Misuse of antibiotics is bad for everyone
- Contradictions with certain health conditions

HOLIDAYS

Sharing medication goes beyond opioids - many teens share ADHD medication. Use only your prescription medications that have your name on the label.

According to the American Psychological Association, approximately 70% of those who misuse prescription medications get them from family or friends. Keep your family safe by disposing of unused medications properly.
