Top tips to win a college scholarship

(StatePoint) More than half of American families used scholarships to pay for college last year. From merit-based to artistic-focused, there are a variety of awards available.

High school senior Grace Vaughn of Trinity, Florida, knows how to successfully secure a college scholarship. After winning the $10,000 dress grand prize in Duck brand's Stuck at Prom Scholarship Contest in 2022, Vaughn is sharing helpful tips to increase students' odds of earning funds for college:

Research, research, research

Search databases and websites to discover award options that may be new to you. Scholarships.com, FastWeb and Bold.org are resources to help narrow down opportunities that match your interests and unique talents. Vaughn also encourages students to leverage social media, where she discovered the Stuck at Prom contest, which challenges teens to create Duck Tape prom creations for a chance to win cash scholarships.

In addition to researching national opportunities, check in with your school counselor and teachers to learn about any local or regional scholarships that are offered through the school or other nearby organizations.

Apply early and often

Federal Student Aid recommends searching for scholarships during the summer between your junior and senior year, but some awards are open to teens as young as 14. Vaughn says entering Stuck at Prom early on in high school gave her an edge on the competition. When she wasn't selected as a finalist her sophomore year, Vaughn submitted for the contest again as a junior and went on to win the $10,000 dress grand prize.

"When I began working on my entry in 2022, I already knew how to construct the dress from Duck Tape, so I went into the process with confidence," Vaughn explains.

If you have the time and energy, she suggests applying for multiple awards to increase your chances of securing funds for school.

Leverage your creative side

Not all programs are focused on academics and athletics, so flex your creative side to win scholarships that will reward artistic abilities in drawing, painting, music and more. Beginning at an early age, Vaughn excelled at visual arts and design, which is how she knew Stuck at Prom was a perfect fit for her.

"Creative awards programs are a good outlet for students to show off their talents outside of typical schoolwork," Vaughn says. "Even if you aren't crafty, scholarship applications could be a chance for you to try something new."

Make scholarships a priority

Vaughn spent 143 hours crafting her prom dress made from Duck Tape to enter Stuck at Prom.

While not all scholarship program submissions will take 143 hours or require making Duck Tape attire, Vaughn says it's important to block off areas on your calendar so you can balance busy school schedules and extracurricular activities along with applications—ensuring there's enough time to work on a polished entry, whether it's creating a piece of art or writing an essay.

While applying for scholarships is time consuming, it can make a huge impact when it comes to paying for college.

Vaughn notes, "It takes commitment and drive to apply for scholarships, but the results are worth it."

Making sense of college costs and financial aid

(StatePoint) That moment when your child receives an acceptance letter to a coveted college is a time to feel pride in their achievements and excited about their future. It's also a time to make sense of the school's price tag. That's where financial award letters come into play.

"You'll receive an award letter from each school your student was accepted to listing all the details of the financial aid package," says Angela Colatriano, College Ave Student Loans. "This information helps you figure out what's covered and how much your family is expected to pay."

Unfortunately, if you're like many parents, you may not be prepared for everything you read in these award letters. In a recent College Ave Student Loans survey, only 30% of parents who received award letters said they received as much aid as they expected, and 74% said they found the expected family contribution surprisingly high. Colatriano also notes that because the layout of these letters varies from school to school, it can be hard to compare their terms.

To help you decipher your financial aid award letters and figure out how to pay for college this fall, consider these tips and insights:

1. Sort grants and scholarships from other aid: If your child was awarded a federal grant or scholarships from the college, they will be listed on your award letter. These do not need to be repaid and are applied directly to the school's tuition. You can also pursue outside scholarships. One easy one to apply for is the College Ave $1,000 monthly scholarship sweepstakes. Encourage your student to apply for scholarships year-round, as every little bit helps.

2. Delve into federal aid: The award letters will show you if your student qualified for the Federal Work-Study program. Likewise, schools will list any federal student loans you're eligible to receive. Don't forget to complete the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) each year to qualify.

3. Meet the gap: If after accounting for grants, scholarships and federal aid there is still a gap between school costs and what you can afford, consider how you can reduce costs or get more funding. For example, you may reconsider your choice of school or have your student take on a part-time job. You might also want to shop around for a private student loan. If you do so, make sure you borrow only what you need. Also, look for a lender offering favorable terms, repayment options and interest rates. College Ave Student Loans offers resources to help you navigate paying for college, including a student loan calculator to show what your monthly payments could look like. To learn more, visit CollegeAve.com.

4. Look before you leap: Remember that most types of financial aid come with terms and conditions. For example, a scholarship may require a student to maintain a certain GPA for it to be renewed the following semester. Federal and private loans will have interest rates and repayment terms. Before accepting or pursuing any type of financial aid, be sure you understand what's involved.

5. Get assistance: When in doubt, don't be afraid to reach out to your school's financial aid office for assistance. They are a great resource to help you and your family navigate the financial aid process.

"With so many competing financial pressures, it's more important than ever for college-bound families to understand the ins and outs of their financial aid offers and what they're responsible to cover each year," says Colatriano.

UAM College of Forestry honors students and staff

The UAM College of Forestry, Agriculture, and Natural Resources recently held its annual spring awards banquet and cook-out to recognize the outstanding contributions and accomplishments of its students, staff, and faculty. The awards were handed out over two nights at the College's Agriculture auditorium.

Dr. Michael Blazier, Dean of the College of Forestry, Agriculture, and Natural Resources expressed his gratitude to the students for their efforts and wished the seniors the best of luck in their next phase of life while inviting underclassmen to return next fall. "It's great to see the support between the students and faculty on display here; it's that support for success that makes studying and working here special," Blazier said.

The College's student clubs led the evenings by recognizing their members for special achievements:

The Support Staff Excellence Award recognizes an individual for notable and outstanding contributions to the success of the College.. Valarie Harvey, Fiscal Support Analyst, was recognized for this award for her invaluable role in maintaining the complex College budgets and accounts during a year in which newer faculty brought in a record amount of research grants and the College grew substantially by adding the Arkansas Center for Forest Business subunit and the agriculture building remodel was completed and agriculture faculty reoccupied it.

The Junior Faculty Excellence Award acknowledges an early-career faculty member for notable and outstanding contributions to research, teaching, and outreach. Dr. Nana Tian, Assistant Professor of Natural Resources Economics/Policy, was honored for her success in leading two new grant-funded projects that brought together several faculties within the University of Arkansas system and universities from surrounding states for forest sustainability and restoration research and outreach.

The Senior Faculty Excellence Award recognizes faculty in the associate and full professor ranks for their high performance in research, teaching, and/or outreach. Dr. Matthew Pellki, Professor, George H. Clippert Endowed Chair and Director, Arkansas Center for Forest Business was honored for his leadership in expanding the College through hiring new experts in forestry economics and guiding the Center for Forest Business through its inaugural year, which saw many successes helping the state's forestry industry and forest landowners.

The UAM College of Forestry, Agriculture and Natural Resources is proud to honor these outstanding students, faculty, and staff for their hard work and dedication to the college, university, and Arkansas.
