County Trying To Improve Cell Service

BRIAN WILMOTH
Editor

The Jackson County Board of Commissioners is entering into an agreement with Vogue Towers in an attempt to improve cell phone service to underserved parts of the county.

Jackson County Mayor Randy Heady said he was approached by Verizon Wireless about the possibility of improving service.

“Verizon is in the process of leasing a tower in Gainesboro,” Heady said. “When they approached me, it gave me the opportunity to talk about putting towers in other parts of the county; what's the likelihood of that that has low cell phone service.”

Vogue Towers is a Chattanooga-based wireless infrastructure company that focuses on building and leasing cell phone towers.

Heady mentioned Dodson Branch, Granville, and Shepardsville as areas that could benefit from the agreement.

“What they approached me with is an agreement here to market county property,” Heady said, “and if they can find a suitable place, such as (Dodson Branch), where we own property, they will lease that from the county and be able to put up a cell phone tower on that.”

In addition to improved service, Heady said that the partnership could also bring in revenue for the county.

“There is a revenue that is attached to that,” Heady said. “So that revenue would come back to the county instead of going somewhere else.”

The County Com-

mission passed a resolution at its Sept. 27 meeting allowing Heady to moved forward with the partnership. He said there were already a number of county-owned properties that he has put forward for Vogue to research.

“I think there's the likelihood we could get something on the north end of the Branch area,” Heady said. “They think there's a high possibility there, which would give Roaring River there some coverage that we don't have now.”

Heady cited the need for cell service along the county's rivers, which are growing in popularity for kayakers. He said service could be critical in an emergency situation.

In other business, the Commission approved a resolution for Heady to begin the process to purchase a piece of property to help alleviate courthouse foot traffic.

Heady said since the building would help with social distancing, the property could be purchased with money for the American Rescue Plan.

“It would allow us to less the amount of traffic in the courthouse on the daily,” Heady said. “We can use this money to acquire the property and to renovate the property.”

Heady said the added space would lessen congestion in the courthouse by around a third. In addition, on during special occasions, such as election day, it would help lessen the number of people needing to come inside the confined space of the courthouse.

Heady said before any sale is final, the purchase for will have to come before the Commission for final approval.

Blessing Box At Local Church

Blessing Box - Mikayla Milton, member of Gainesboro 1st UMC, solicited help from her father Rev. Tim Dunavant and local craftsman Rodney Walker to build and install a Blessing Box on Montpelier Avenue. Just as the box says “If you need it, take it. If you have it, leave it.” The box is intended to house food and personal hygiene items that are available to anyone in need. Likewise, anyone in the community that would like to drop off these items may place them in the box for others to find. “Whether you are leaving a donation or need to take an item, we pray this box be a blessing to everyone who utilizes it.”

Hunters Can Donate Their Deer To Feed

NASHVILLE - Tennessee Wildlife Fed-

eration's Hunters for the Hungry program is now accepting deer donations for the 2021 deer season. More than 55 deer processors across the state are accepting donations of deer to feed Tennessee families in need.

To see processors currently participating, visit tnwf.org/processors.

"We've added seven new processors this year across the state which means more sportsmen and women can donate their harvest to help feed families in need," said Matt Simcox, Hunters for the Hungry manager. "Every deer donated provides 168 servings of lean healthy protein to those who need it most."

When hunters harvest a deer, they may donate it at a participating processor. The venison is processed and then provided to hunger relief organizations.

Right now, hunters can drop off a whole deer donation at no cost to them. Each year, Hunters for the Hungry covers tens of thousands of dollars in processing fees for donations. If deer donations surpass available funding for this season, hunters can pay a reduced, $60 processing fee or redeem a Deer Coin.

In partnership with the Tennessee Wildlife Resources Agency (TWRA), Hunters for the Hungry will test every deer donated within Unit CWD (Chronic Wasting Disease) for the disease. Hunters for the Hungry will also test many of the donations made outside Unit CWD in Region 1.

Only whole deer donations will be accepted in Region 1 and the counties that border it. Pound or Pack donations, which allow hunters to give a portion of their harvest, will continue to be accepted in the rest of the state.

In an abundance of caution, Hunters for the Hungry will discard all donations that test positive for CWD. There is no evidence CWD is transmitted to humans but the CDC still recommends against eating CWD-positive meat.

For more information about Hunters for the Hungry or to purchase a Deer Coin, visit tnwf.org/HuntersForTheHungry.

Kings Mountain Turned Tide Of American Revolution

By Bill Carey

October 7 is the 241st anniversary of the most important victory in Tennessee history.

During the Revolutionary War, a British commander named Patrick Ferguson led an army of British loyalists through South Carolina. Along the way, he sent a message to the Scotch-Irish settlers in present-day northeast Tennessee, telling them to lay down their arms or he would “lay waste to their country with fire and sword.”

Isaac Shelby and John Sevier, leaders in northeast Tennessee, decided to raise an army and fight Ferguson before he had a chance to carry out his threat.

On September 25, these men gathered at the Sycamore Shoals of the Watauga River (present-day Elizabethton). There were 240 from Washington County, 240 from Sullivan County, and 400 from Virginia. Most of these men had no military training. None had real uniforms. Some didn’t even have shoes!

But they were skilled with rifles, and many had previous experience fighting against Native Americans. These men said goodbye to their families, not knowing if they would ever see them again.

The “Overmountain

Men,” as they became known, crossed the Appalachian Mountains—marching, walking and riding 330 miles in two weeks. On October 7, they tracked down Ferguson’s army on one of the few hills in the northwest part of South Carolina, a hill Ferguson had dubbed “Kings Mountain.”

The colonial forces split into groups and surrounded the hill. Ferguson’s men lined up and prepared to defend themselves.

The battle that followed was not long or complicated.

The colonial forces yelled at the top of their lungs and charged up the hill. They fired, ducked behind the nearest rock or tree to reload, and fired again. They used tactics they had learned from fighting Native Americans on the frontier.

Ferguson’s men fired, reloaded and fired again. On at least two occasions, his men affixed bayonets to their rifles and charged down the hill. The Overmountain Men ran from the bayonets. But after Ferguson’s men headed back up to defend the top of the hill, the Overmountain Men turned around and chased them.

There are many first-person accounts of the battle. One soldier, Leonard Hice, was shot twice in the left arm, once in his left leg, once in his right knee and once in the chest. He kept firing after the first two bullets hit his arm by resting his rifle against a tree. “Whether my bullet brought the enemy down or not, I cannot say, for many were as good a marksman as I,” he later wrote.

We believe the men shooting from the bottom of the hill were more likely to hit their targets than the men shooting down at them, in part because of the rocks and trees they hid behind.

About the time colonial soldiers made their way to the top of the hill, they killed Ferguson. (A later examination of the body revealed that the British commander had been shot seven times.) At that point, the battle became a slaughter.

In the Battle of Kings Mountain, 244 members of Ferguson’s army were killed, 163 were wounded and 688 were taken prisoner. Only 29 colonial soldiers were killed and 58 wounded.

Coming at the time that it did, after British victories at Charleston and Camden, Kings Mountain was a huge boost for the American side.

One final story about Kings Mountain: After the battle, Sevier chose a Washington County soldier named Joseph Greer to deliver the message about the battle to the American Congress. Greer, a physical giant by standards of the time, made the journey by himself, avoiding British soldiers and Native Americans the whole way.

When Greer got to Congress, the doorkeeper tried to bar his entrance. The veteran of Kings Mountain pushed him aside and delivered the message to the representatives there, who were thrilled with the news.

Joseph Greer later moved to Lincoln County, where he lived until 1831.

TDMHSAS Receives Funding To Support Mental Health Needs Of Flood Survivors

NASHVILLE, Tenn.— The Tennessee Department of Mental Health and Substance Abuse Services (TDMHSAS) is receiving federal funding to support the mental health needs of people who survived deadly flash flooding in August.

More than $116,000 in funding through the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) Crisis Counseling Program will support services for residents of Dickson, Hickman, Houston, and Humphreys Counties. The four counties were covered under a Major Disaster Declaration following devastating flash flooding during severe thunderstorms on August 21, 2021. Twenty people perished in hardest-hit Humphreys County.

Mental health services will be provided through Centerstone which has existing relationships in the affected counties and has experience doing this work following natural disasters. Funding through the grant will provide staffing for mental health professionals from Centerstone to visit affected communities, assess needs, and deliver services.

“We know the mental health impacts of a disaster like this are often not fully realized for some time after the event. The pain of loss of life and damage to home and community is something that survivors will be grappling with for months and years to come,” said TDMHSAS Commissioner Marie Williams, LCSW. “We’re so grateful to our funders at the federal level for recognizing the need and to our community partners at Centerstone for stepping up to support the resiliency of the survivors of this tragic event.”

This initial funding is designed to provide services for up to 60 days. The department is also applying to FEMA for an additional grant which would provide extended support to survivors for up to nine months.

Waiting On The U.S. House To Bridge The Digital Divide

BETSY HUBER
Special to the Sentinel

Families across America’s heartland have had a difficult year and a half. The COVID-19 pandemic, the economic troubles it caused, and an ongoing labor shortage have made it more difficult than ever for America’s hardworking families in rural and agricultural communities to unlock the full potential of our modern economy.

This is especially true for those communities that disproportionately lack access to affordable and reliable broadband internet. To secure a future of prosperity for America’s rural communities, we need to completely bridge the digital divide and ensure every American has access to the digital technologies that support success in our modern world.

Substantial positive investments toward achieving the national goal of bridging the digital divide through broadband deployment, financial support for broadband service and digital skills training were included in the bipartisan Infrastructure and Jobs Investment Act recently passed by the U.S. Senate. Now, America’s rural communities are counting on the U.S. House of Representatives to swiftly pass this package, including the $65 billion down payment on closing the broadband gap.

The broadband investments included in the bipartisan infrastructure package and additional permanent solutions are urgently needed.

Take Minnesota, for example. According to the Federal Communications Commission, whose data Republicans and Democrats agree underestimates the scale of the digital divide, at least 140,000 Minnesotans lack access to broadband. A separate study from Broadband-Now finds there are as many as 440,000 Minnesotans who lack access to a broadband connection. A third analysis, looking at how people use the internet rather than service, found that more than 2 million Minnesotans do not access the internet at speeds meeting the definition of broadband.

Nationwide, nearly one-fourth of Americans in rural areas still don’t have access to broadband, and rural adults are less likely to have multiple connected devices. As many as 29 percent of American farms still lack broadband access.

The challenge is also not limited to rural areas — and substantially impacts every American community that lacks broadband access for all. In urban Minneapolis for example, one quarter of households facing the greatest income insecurity have no access to broadband as a result of affordability challenges.

This gap, wherever it exists, prevents too many Americans from accessing digital tools in education, health care, workforce development, small business, precision agriculture and much more.

The National Grange commends the spirit of bipartisan cooperation that resulted in substantial positive investments to expand broadband connectivity being included in the bipartisan infrastructure package and advanced out of the Senate.

Now, House lawmakers cannot delay in passing the urgently needed package.

A majority of voters from across the political spectrum support the bipartisan package and 62 percent of Americans believe broadband funding must be a part of all infrastructure spending packages.

We encourage House lawmakers, including Reps. Jim Hagedorn, Angie Craig, Dean Phillips, Betty McCollum, Ilhan Omar, Tom Emmer, Michelle Fischbach and Pete Stauber, to swiftly pass the Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act and then build on the positive momentum for action by advancing additional solutions, like ensuring financial support for broadband is enough for families in every community to afford service.

Every American community, especially those in the heartland, is counting on their leadership to bridge the digital divide.

Betsy Huber lives in Oxnard, Pa., and is president of the National Grange of the Order of Patrons of Husbandry.

Veterans Need Your Help This Winter

by Freddy Groves

It looks like COVID isn’t likely to vanish soon. Because of restrictions everywhere, long-term patients at Department of Veterans Affairs hospitals might have a lonely winter when their regular visitors are either limited or banned altogether. You can help.

While you probably won’t be able to visit patients, you can help to break up their long days with gifts, cards and notes to let them know that people on the outside are thinking about them.

First stop is the website for your local VA hospital. Look for Voluntary Services and give them a call to see if they have a wish list. They might be looking for anything from thick socks to XXL T-shirts. If you’re lucky, there might be a special list for the coming holidays that includes handheld electronic games, books of a certain genre or small radios with earbuds. You won’t know until you ask.

Your call to Voluntary Services might reveal that instead of needing things for the patients, they need your help with those who have been discharged. Maybe there’s a homeless veteran being moved into his own apartment. He’ll need a move-in basket of everything from new towels to TP to a manual can opener.

And there might be even more ways you can help at the VA hospital. Drivers are a big deal, and taking a van around to pick up patients who need to come in for outpatient treatment is a way to guarantee that those veterans don’t miss crucial appointments. In cold weather, parking lot shuttle drivers bring people from their cars to the door and back. Again, a very worthwhile endeavor.

If you’re in a veterans’ service group such as American Legion, enlist members to help with the financial end of buying gifts and necessities. One way or another, don’t let this coming winter go by without doing something for your fellow veterans. They’d be there for you if the tables were turned.

Smith & Wesson To Relocate Headquarters To Tennessee

NASHVILLE – Tennessee Gov. Bill Lee, Department of Economic and Community Development Commissioner Bob Rolfe and Smith & Wesson Brands, Inc. officials today announced the U.S.-based leader in firearms manufacturing and design will relocate its headquarters and other major operations from Springfield, Massachusetts to Maryville, Tennessee.

In addition to its headquarters, Smith & Wesson will relocate its distribution, assembly, and plastic injection molding operations to Tennessee. The project represents an investment of approximately $125 million and will create 750 new jobs.

Smith & Wesson will locate in Partnership Park North in Blount County, where the company plans to break ground before the end of the year.

Founded in 1852, Smith & Wesson is one of the world’s leading manufacturers and designers of firearms. They manufacture a wide array of handguns (including revolvers and pistols), long guns (including modern sporting rifles, bolt action rifles, and shotguns), handcuffs, suppressors, and other firearm-related products for sale to a wide variety of customers, including firearm enthusiasts, collectors, hunters, sportsmen, competitive shooters, individuals desiring home and personal protection, law enforcement and security agencies and officers, and military agencies in the United States and throughout the world.

Smith & Wesson joins more than 20 small arms and ammunition manufacturers located in Tennessee. Tennessee ranks No. 1 in the nation for employment in the small arms and ammunition sector, with employment increasing by 54% over the last five years.

Since 2017, TNECD has supported 10 economic development projects in Blount County, resulting in approximately 3,100 job commitments and $1.4 billion in capital investment.

Prevent Pet-Related Damage To The House

The benefits of having a pet are innumerable. Pets can be companions, protectors, service animals, and even help produce products that can be sold, such as eggs from chickens. While there are many positive attributes to pets, one potential concern is the impact they have on the home.

Pet-related damage can occur when pets are angry or happy. Boisterous animals may scratch or claw at furniture and floors. Some animals may climb or chew. Woodwork and furniture can be damaged by pet paws and teeth, but that's not where it ends. The following are some potential pet-damage problems and how to avoid them.

Marking
Many animals use scent markers to establish their territory and communicate with other animals. As a result, both male and female pets may spray urine in certain areas of the house. While it may not eliminate the problem immediately, making sure to neuter or spay cats and dogs can reduce the likelihood that they'll mark indoors or attempt to seek out and mate with feral animals they smell canvassing the property.

Accidents
In addition to marking, pets that have not been properly trained or were trained and are experiencing a behavioral or medical issue may begin soiling in improper areas, such as outside of the litter box or in the house. Obedience training can head off some issues, but if a medical condition is suspected, consult with a veterinarian promptly.

Dirt, Fur And More
An investment in regular grooming can help keep certain damage at bay, states Home Advisor. Regularly brushing and trimming coats, keeping nails clipped and bathing will keep a home fresh and minimize damage. Other pets may not be groomed but require cleaning of cages or other habitats. Bird droppings and feathers can get on surfaces. Cleaning daily or very frequently can help keep a home tidy.

Provide Toys And Scratching Posts
Pets need an outlet to tame anxiety and energy. If they don't have suitable outlets, pets may cause damage to a home. Cats will take to furniture to stretch their paws if they don't have scratching posts or special mats.

Dogs, particularly puppies, can be orally fixated. When the urge to chew sets in, unless there are appropriate chew toys, furniture, moldings and other items around the house may become fair game.

It is important to note that declawing a cat to prevent damage should not be a consideration. It is a surgery that can cause ongoing health problems. Nail caps can be used as a safe alternative.

Escape Artists
In some cases, pets may chew or scratch their way through doors and window screens. Others may dig under fencing or climb, leaving damage in their wake. Boredom, anxiety or lack of training may be behind these behaviors, according to Pets Weekly. However, the urge to roam also may be tied to pets not being fixed. Work with the vet or a trainer to help stop these issues.

Pets can cause damage around the house. But certain strategies can help decrease the likelihood that pets cause damage around the house.

Pet-Related Damage – Pet-related damage can occur when pets are angry or happy. Boisterous animals may scratch or claw at furniture and floors.

TDHS Provides Additional Support

NASHVILLE – The Tennessee Department of Human Services (TDHS) announced additional steps to help parents navigate the balance of raising a family and holding down a job. Beginning October 1, the TDHS increased child care payment assistance rates by 10% across all categories of care in the Child Care Certificate Program.

Under this program, the state pays a reimbursement rate directly to child care providers on behalf of families who are enrolled and meet the income and work or education requirements of the program. This overall rate increase will save many participating families money by reducing the portion they have to pay to cover tuition expenses.

Additionally, this rate increase will provide financial support to child care providers who may be recovering from financial losses during the pandemic. This additional income for child care providers and will help providers stay open and remain available to serve families in their communities that need quality care for their children.

“Many child care providers have continuously and consistently served families throughout the pandemic, enabling parents to work and children to continue their critical early learning,” said TDHS Commissioner Clarence H. Carter. “This rate increase will create incentives to grow the child care industry and remove some of the barriers that make it challenging for parents to enter the workforce and support their families.”

Beginning October 1, 2021, TDHS will also begin providing additional assistance to child care agencies who care for children identified with disabilities or special needs. A 15% rate bonus will be applied to each qualifying child that participates in the Child Care Certificate Program. In addition to the 15% bonus, the Department is partnering with the Child Care Resource and Referral Network to establish a team of Inclusion Quality Coaches to promote inclusive early childhood environments.

These investments are the latest in a series of moves to support and expand childcare in Tennessee. In recent years TDHS has offered Enhancement and COVID Relief grants, established a WAGES program to raise salaries, and created a bonus for providers operating in communities that don't have an adequate supply of child care providers.
