WEST END

Pay It Forward Trust awards nearly $40K

SPECIAL TO THE FORUM

The West End Pay It Forward Trust (WEPIFT) recently awarded local organizations a total of $39,476 to support community and economic development in the West End. These contributions constituted the seventh round of resiliency grant funding, promoting economic growth and recovery in the region.

Following the early closure of the local power plant, Tri-State Generation and Transmission Association donated $500,000 to the trust. WEPIFT allocated $100,000 of these funds to its permanent endowment, ensuring the longevity of its community grant program, and designated the remaining $400,000 for resiliency grants. Since the first cycle of resiliency grants in October 2022, WEPIFT has provided more than $360,000 to organizations in the West End, committing to the region's people and future prosperity.

The West End Pay It Forward Trust is proud to announce its latest group of grantees. The West End Public Schools will receive support for a National Archery in the Schools program, encouraging the area's youth to be active, explore a new sport, and gain valuable skills. Students in the West End will also benefit from the Scholastic Apprenticeship Program at Paradox Cycles. This program will allow young people to learn a trade while receiving work study credits and mentorship from role models in the community. WEPIFT believes that creating opportunities for youth in the West End is vital for sustaining the local community and economy.

The trust is also furthering its commitment to the area's economic development by funding an environmental study necessary for future trail construction. The West End Trails Alliance has promoted tourism and bolstered outdoor engagement in the region, and WEPIFT is thrilled to invest in its continued success. The final resiliency grant of the cycle, to Paradox Community Center, will fund new siding for the building, ensuring that Paradox residents will have a place to gather for years to come.

Established in 2013, the West End Pay It Forward Trust strives to improve West End communities now and for future generations. WEPIFT is a permanent, locally-controlled endowment fund, supporting community and economic development projects. The trust is led by board members Jane Thompson, Sara Bachman, Erin Jones, Troy Masters, Kendra Ballard, Doyleene Garvey, Sara Bray,

Upcoming town hall is June 6 in Naturita

By REGAN TUTTLE, Editor

On Monday, May 29, the Montrose County Board of Commissioners said in a news release they were excited to announce a special town hall event on June 6 in Naturita. They said the town hall provides a valuable opportunity for residents to connect with commissioners, ask questions and also share their concerns.

The event will take place at the Naturita Community Center, which is located at 411 W. 2nd Ave.

"It's a chance to learn more about our county, find out what projects are happening now and in the future, and most importantly, make sure your voice is heard," commissioners said in the news release.

Board Chair Sue Hansen shared her thoughts on the event, highlighting its importance for residents to become more informed about the county and its projects.

"This town hall is a great way for everyone to learn more about our county and what's going on," Hansen said. "You can find out about the projects we're working on now and the ones we have planned for the future. But most importantly, it's an opportunity for you to speak up and let us know what you think. Your opinions and ideas matter to us."

WOLVES

VanWinkle: SB-256 was an insurance policy

By REGAN TUTTLE, Editor

After approximately 15-18 months of stakeholder work on the Colorado Wolf Plan, it was approved at the beginning of May by the Colorado Parks and Wildlife. Cattlewoman Janie VanWinkle, formerly of Nucla and now of Grand Junction, said while in the beginning she struggled with the planning, it turned out to be a good process. She said ranchers, wolf advocates and biologists on both sides of the issue came together and found consensus last December. She said the wildlife commission "had been tinkering with the plan," but it was approved in May.

That plan had an original cap set at $8,000 for loss of a livestock animal resulting from a wolf kill. VanWinkle said it seemed fair, and that the amount would cover any calf on her Charolais ranch. She said she knows that won't cover an expensive bull or a fancy horse, but she's not sure wolves are going for the larger animals. She was surprised when a commissioner, who's also a rancher from southeastern Colorado, wanted to move the cap to $15,000.

She said the lethal-take piece is contentious. In the plan, a problem wolf can be shot — if it's truly a problem and all non-lethal methods have been exhausted. But, the wolf is still federally listed on the endangered species list.

Ranchers have been holding their breath waiting for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to implement the 10(j) ruling that lists the wolf as nonessential to Colorado's ecosystem.

When SB-256 was introduced, it brought some relief to ranchers because it stated that wolves cannot be released until the 10(j) ruling is in place. But, Dan Gibbs, the director of the Department of Natural Resources, testified against it, and then Governor Jared Polis vetoed the bill May 16.

VanWinkle said for ranchers, SB-256 was an "insurance policy." She added Gov. Polis could have let it become law without his signature, but it was late in the session. There were votes to override his decision, but they adjourned the session before his veto of SB-256.

"Polis said it went against the will of the people," VanWinkle said.

Voters in Colorado, albeit mostly Front Range people, approved wolves being released by Dec. 31. But, language of the ballot question can be argued. Does it truly mean "wolves on the ground" or does it mean "the processes are in place to have wolves

EVENTS

West End prepares for Water Days, July 1

By REGAN TUTTLE, Editor

Water Days in the West End is July 1 this year, and the event's steering committee would like to announce to local communities that the 2023 parade theme is "San Miguel River High Times."

On Friday night beforehand, the Rimrocker Historical Society will host an ice cream social at 6 p.m. on Nucla's Main Street at the new museum. Line-up for the parade starts at 10 a.m. on Third Street at the Catholic church, and the parade starts at 11 a.m.

This year's Water Days King and Queen are Evelyn and Forrest Herring. They'll ride in the parade and will be honored by the emcee. The parade ends at the Nucla Town Park, where there will be waterslides for kids, free of charge. A horseshoe tournament is scheduled for 1 p.m., and the Nucla-Naturita Fire Department will conduct a spray-down with the fire trucks sometime in the afternoon.

This year, the Red Rock Rodders will be displaying their cars at the park, and vendors will be selling food and craft items throughout the day. Music will be played by a DJ, and then fireworks will take place at the N Hill at dark.

The Desert Flyer Band will play for a community dance in the park, also free of charge.

"I would like to take this time to thank everyone who made this year's Water Days happen," said Tina Carver, the vice chairperson for the steering committee. "First, a giant thank you to Citizen's State Bank for helping sponsor Water Days this year."

Carver said she is asking that folks stop into the bank in Naturita to let them know how much their support is appreciated.

"Second, the San Miguel Basin Forum for doing the articles," she said. "I so enjoy reading the paper. Help them out, and buy the newspaper."

She also thanks others, like Jane Thompson and Doyleene Garvey, the ladies instrumental in Navajo Taco Nights "who donated chili for every dinner." She said Water Days organizers are also shouting out Ruth's Toffee for donations of butter, Amanda Scott for oil and sour cream, and Susan Rice for onions and cheese. Carver said nobody should forget the fry bread cooks, Joe Rice and Roger Carver, and she said Vicki Allen and Tony Adkins are the ones behind the scenes making and rolling out the fry bread.

Carver said Water Days organiz-

TIPS FROM THE WEST END POSSE

Magnetic north

By MARK RACKAY

It has been drilled into our little outdoor minds, since we received our first compass, that there is a difference between magnetic north and true north. I remember that I paid as much attention to this as I did to algebra in class. My little compass pointed out the way I needed to go.

Magnetic declination, or the magnetic variation, is the angle on the horizontal plane between magnetic north and the true north. The faithful old compass always points to the magnetic north, which corresponds to the Earth's magnetic field lines. True north is the direction along a meridian towards the geographic north, as shown on charts and maps.

Depending on where you are on this good old Earth, the difference can be as much as 21 degrees. That many degrees are enough to make you miss your mark, and never see it go past out the window. In my case, coming home from an offshore trip, it was enough to move me farther up the coast than I wanted to go. It was a good thing I was not running home from a storm, or we would have had a real problem.

Think of the Earth as a giant magnet. The shape of the Earth's magnetic field is like a long bar magnet, but it is inclined about 11 degrees from the axis rotation of the Earth. This simply means that the Earth's magnetic pole does not jive with the North Pole, shown on the map. And, if that is not enough to make you crazy, the magnetic fields are moving.

There are two locations of a magnetic field; one is about a thousand miles south of the North Pole in Canada, and the other is in Siberia. These two magnetic field locations are not fixed; rather, they drift around. Their movement has been about nine miles a year.

Since the 1990s, however, the drift of the Earth's magnetic pole has a present speed of 30 to 40 miles per year, and it is drifting towards Siberia. The field in Siberia is strengthening, while the one in Canada is weakening, playing tug-of-war, so to speak.

Scientific models suggest the magnetic field inside the Earth's core will continue to drift toward Siberia, at least for the next few decades. Given that the pole's position is governed by the balance between the Canadian and Siberian magnetic patch, it would take only a small adjustment of the field to shift the pole back towards Canada.

The reason this is such a big deal is because it does not just affect our little compasses. The exact location of magnetic north is vital for all kinds of navigational systems used by ships, airplanes, Google Maps and smartphones.

New studies of birds that are blown way off course of their regular migratory routes may use the magnetic signatures of the magnetic fields of the Earth to find their way back on course. Birdwatchers are always excited to see a bird show up, such as the recent sightings in Colorado of the frigate birds, that are not normally seen in an area.

Hurricanes and other weather systems can cause birds to get blown way off course from their normal routes. A scientific team from Bangor and Keele universities have discovered that birds can navigate from a magnetic position beyond what they have experienced in their normal navigation route, back to the correct route.

Adult birds already familiar with their normal routes were held in captivity for a short period of time before being released back into the wild and exposed to a simulation of the earth's magnetic signature at a location thousands of miles beyond their natural migration corridor.

Despite remaining at their capture site and experiencing all the other clues about their location, like starlight, sights, sounds and smells of their actual location, the birds still showed the urge to begin their journey as though they were in the location suggested by the magnetic signal they were receiving.

This just goes to show that the magnetic field of the Earth has far more reaching consequences than just messing with our compass. Science has not completely determined what effect a changing or moving field may have on us as humans, but like global warming, it is something we should pay attention to.

History: Rimrocker Historical Society
Naturita Days of the pastBy JANE THOMPSON, Rimrocker Historical Society

Naturita is gearing up for their Naturita Days celebration this Saturday, June 3, with lots of festivities and excitement. They've worked hard to bring back this exciting event, and we wish them much success!

We recently lost a dear member of the Rimrocker Historical Society, Nancy Walker. She served as secretary for many years and was a faithful member of the society as well as the town clerk for Naturita for many years. She wrote an article for the San Miguel Basin Forum in 2001 about the beginnings of Naturita Days, "Naturita Days and the San Miguel Boat Races," and I thought you would all enjoy her insights:

"The San Miguel River boat races were started in the spring of 1954 during the spring runoff. It all began as a dare between the men working at the VCA mill. The boats had to be homemade and hand-propelled, with two men in each boat. The course started at the Pinon Bridge and ended at the bridge over Dry Creek, where Highway 141 and 90 intersect.

Every kind of craft imaginable was entered in the race. These crafts were made out of scraps, odds and ends, and anything that would float. What a turnout!

The road from Pinon down was lined with cars and people. Every wide place overseeing the river was full. Anxious wives and family members were especially visible.

As the crafts progressed down the river (some barely left the starting point), the crowd followed. At times the crowd cheered; at other times they groaned. Of all the entries that started, only a few finished the race. Abe Finch and his partner Gary Walker came in first. They were using two truck inner tubes lashed together. James Johnson and Ernie Garber, riding on two 50-gallon barrels lashed together, came in last. Many sunburns, muscle aches, scratches and bruises were in evidence that night.

The next spring the boat race

became official, with trophies awarded to the first four winners. The starting point remained the Pinon Bridge, but the boats landed at what is now the Naturita Ball Park, because of the open space and low banks. About 1956 or '57, Naturita Days became an annual celebration in conjunction with the boat races ...

The boats still had to be hand-made and hand-propelled. Anything from two car hoods welded together to wooden rafts, rubber boats and who knew what else entered. Maybe some of the boats never finished the race, but no one drowned or suffered more than bruises, scratches and sunburns. Even with all the hard work, almost everyone seemed to have fun.

Since the races drew such large crowds, the area merchants decided to make it a two-day celebration. A parade down Main Street with floats started the festivities. Queen candidates were in the parade also. Ping-pong balls were dropped from an airplane by Carl Pierson, with lucky kids receiving prizes from participating area merchants. Greased pole contests, a greased pig contest, baseball games, sack races, and mining and drilling contests were held with each new year bringing new ideas and things to do. In later years, an open-air dance was held at the open-air pavilion at the present day city park.

In later years homemade kayaks became the mode of transportation down the river. I'm sure many of the wives were pressed into service to help get those boats ready in time for the race. This writer even wonders if as much time and hard work went into the daily jobs, be it mining, ranching or milling, as went into building those boats. But rest assured the races were fun!"

Naturita Days was eventually taken on by the Lions Club, and others tried to keep it going throughout the years. Hats off to those making the effort to bring this event back. I know the boat races were in the plans for this year, but the high spring run-off has changed those plans. There may be a race later in the summer, but it is still in the works.

Get out there and support Naturita Days 2023!

Author's note: Please forgive my mistake in last week's article about the Vietnam Veterans. The Nucla-Naturita cemetery in Nucla is called the Cedar Ridge Cemetery, not the Pinon Ridge Cemetery. I appreciate being corrected on that one.

on the ground?"

VanWinkle said that she asked Fish and Wildlife officials earlier this spring, "What if we don't have a 10(j) ruling before we release the wolves?"

Officials said it becomes a moot point; the 10(j) ruling can't be implemented then.

"That's why SB-256 was so critical," VanWinkle said.

What's more is that nobody can say where the wolves are coming from. VanWinkle is confused by CPW officials claiming that western states are willing to give Colorado wolves, but 9News interviewed officials in various states who say they've not been asked about that.

"It begs the question: Where are they getting wolves?" VanWinkle said. "The state has not been transparent with where or how they're getting wolves."

And, what will the wolves eat? VanWinkle said they'll start with deer, elk and moose. But, she said with the rough winter that northwestern Colorado had, the game populations are not in great shape. She said the state may be cutting hunting licenses because of the winter.

She said it will be a problem for the rancher who "wins the wolf lottery."

She's not sure the wolves will stay at their release spots. She thinks they'll migrate, maybe even back to where they originally came from. According to a map on CPW's website, the release spots are around Pitkin County. No wolves are permitted to be released within 60 miles of the state line. They also cannot be released on tribal lands, because the Native Americans don't want them.

Town hall

The June 6 town hall will begin at 11 a.m., and the commissioners and county officials will be there to provide information, listen to community questions, and address any concerns they may have. Whether people have questions about the county's local rules, want to share their concerns, or if they simply want to know more about what commissioners are doing, the town hall on June 6 is the opportunity to get involved in the West End community.

County officials are planning additional town hall meetings this year for residents across the county. For more information about Montrose County and board meetings, the public should visit montrosecounty.net.

Mayor of Nucla, Kirk Yerke, agreed people should try to attend. He's only fielded a few complaints for the Town of Nucla. He said many people don't show up to the town meetings that he officiates with the town board. He encourages folks to attend the county meeting next week and to become involved.

"Come to meetings," he said, "for everybody."

Christina Pierce, the executive director of the Basin Clinic in Naturita, said if people want the commissioners to listen to them, they need to attend these things, like next week's town hall.

"If you want them to know how important the Basin Clinic is and the West End ... and our livelihood ... Just because we are not many people doesn't mean we are not important," she said. "We need to have our voice heard."

Pierce also added that sometimes people assume that if people don't show up to the town halls or listening sessions that everything is fine. She said that's not always the case. She said community members shouldn't wait until something goes terribly wrong to complain. She said people can speak with local leaders before anything becomes a big issue.

Jay Saxton typically fills the orders for Navajo Taco Night, and there are many local kids that work as carhop for the fundraisers. That includes Ryder Carver, Eden Saxton, Remi Long, Xaden Curuso and Jonah Richardson.

And, Carver thanks all in the West End for participating in the fundraising meals, since the funds go toward producing Water Days.

“Most importantly, the community supports our monthly dinners,” she said.

The Water Days steering committee is made of just three people. Along with Carver are Linda Adkins and Dana Saxton running the show.

“We are a small group, and as you can see, we persuade our family and friends into helping,” she said. “If anyone is interested in joining us, we could use the help. . . . We hope to see you at this year’s celebration July 1.”

OBITUARY

Karon E. Proctor
 July 7, 1945 — May 15, 2023

Karon E. Proctor, of Nucla, passed away at her home on May 15, 2023, after a lengthy illness.
 She was 77.
 Karon was born July 7, 1945, in Salmon, Idaho, to Emily Beck and Shirden Blood. She was one of eight children. The family moved to Paradox in the early 1950s, and it was there Karon met the love of her life, Gary.
 Gary and Karon were married on Dec. 31, 1965, and shared a union of almost 51 years and produced two children, a daughter, Ailene, and a son, Gary Michael.
 Karon's primary role in life was a homemaker and mom to her family, and she excelled at it. She had many hobbies and was an excellent cook, seamstress and gardener. And, while not many may have known it, she was also an avid Nintendo player! Karon would sit and play MarioKart or SuperMario with her grandkids for hours, teaching them to conquer the game. She was in her 40s and 50s when she acquired her mad gaming skills.
 Karon was a huge supporter of whatever sport her grandkids played, especially softball and wrestling, and she rarely missed a game or match. She babysat her grandkids and great-grandkids and was always patient with them. Karon's grandkids will never forget picking asparagus and developing their love of gardening from working with her in her garden.
 But above all of her hobbies, Karon loved caring for her family the most. That was what brought her true happiness and joy. She is survived by her children, Ailene Smith (Freddie), of Nucla, and Gary Proctor (Donna), of Pueblo West; her grandchildren, Mikael Smith (Kimbrly), of Fruita, Melissa Johnson (David), of Nucla, and Bailey Proctor, of Pueblo West; and her great-grandchildren, Hunter and Emily Johnson, and Tytan and Mylo Smith.
 Karon is survived by her sister Judy Proctor (Mark), of Paradox; brothers, Tom Blood, of Grand Junction, Jerry Blood (Lisa), of Delta, and Jim Blood (Dorie), of Saint Maries, Idaho; and many nieces and nephews.
 Karon is preceded in death by her husband, Gary; her parents, Shirden and Emily Blood; and her sisters, Nadine Blood, Shirdean Wilson, and Emma Jean Chamberlain.
 A graveside service will be held June 2 at 11 a.m. at the Nucla Cemetery. Arrangements are being handled by Martin Mortuary in Grand Junction.
