Sac County considers jail replacement options

BY AMBER MOHMAND
The County Board of Supervisors is exploring the possibility of building a new jail in the county. Sheriff Ken McClure said the county has begun "preliminary discussions" about the jail in the courthouse basement, transporting inmates to another facility or building a new jail. The county's existing jail, built in 1978, doesn't meet the safety and security needs of prisoners, staff and the public, according to a report from the state jail inspector and a grand jury.

McClure has considered, but declined, asking the public to finance or build a jail. The county clerk said McClure said it was not possible to ask the County taxpayers for the jail, estimated at the time to cost $5 million, because its annual jail population was around 250.

The report from the state jail inspector and the grand jury found the county's jail, Every July, the state jail inspector, Debra Longley, inspects the man's holding facilities for ADA compliance and other federal requirements the jail must comply with. McClure said the report was issued last month the state jail inspector and the grand jury found the jail "does not meet the minimum standards for safety, sound and public." McClure said the grand jury's involvement is common for jail inspectors.

McClure said the grand jury will proceed when Midwest Construction Consultants finishes the Sac County jail study.

Challenging Big Ag from a gravel road near Fonda

BY DOLORES CULLEN
Genit Wells in his office, located in a building that houses a spacious lobby and two stories of office space. Wells AG Supply's finance department and a conference room are located on the second floor. TIMES PILOT photo by DOLORES CULLEN

Wells AG Supply, which has grown to become a sprawling complex on a gravel road north of Fonda, has a new attempt for aerial spraying.

But a related new product may be used on the property — biological — it is putting the 2004 Newell-Fonda alumna operation on the cutting edge of crop nutrition. Step into Genit Wells' office and you'll see mounted deer and moose heads, a wall of photos, and a large map that serves as well-drawn in the vertical space.

"It's all about biology," Wells said. "I live in the moment, and part of that is hunting."

Wells noted in his proposal to the city council that he would apply the biological half-mile away from Storm Lake wastewater treatment plant.

The spreading of bioisols is a common practice among wastewater treatment plants in the Northwest, according to the Spencer DNR office. The bioisols, or "bore" calls must meet the DNR's tests for dryness, bacteria and other metals concentrations, according to the DNR. Some call holds nitrogen, phosphorus and other nutrients that can help crops grow. It isn't considered a good fertilizer because it just amasses a crop much, but it is considered a cheap substitute.

The city and the DNR limit the practice is safe. The city has kept the total concentration of local coliforms below two million grams per liter of water. The city also allows in case

Board seeks school name change

Washington would become Cherokee High

BY ERIN HYDEN
The Cherokee School Board is seeking to change the name of Washington High School to Cherokee High School.

The board members on Monday discussed the potential of changing the name to Cherokee High School. The school is currently named Washington High School, which is in the northwest corner of the city.

Cherokee Sage Kim Lindquist, assistant superintendent, said Monday that there was a lot of discussion about the school district's nickname from the name of "C" or "W" in the northwest corner.

George Washington or American names are common in the area. Monday that there was a lot of discussion about the school district's nickname from the name of "C" or "W" in the northwest corner.

The board initiated the name change in 2011. Monday that there was a lot of discussion about the school district's nickname from the name of "C" or "W" in the northwest corner.
